THIRTY-ONE BOYS, OF SAFETY PATROL, RECEIVE MEDALS

"Safety First" Meeting Outlined by Superintendent James McGee

LADS CONGRATULATED

Pupils Hear Safety Talks; See Pictures Advocating Street Caution

To 31 members of the Safety Patrol of Bristol schools were medals awarded yesterday afternoon when "Safety First" Day was observed at the Grand Theatre, with a program outlined by Superintendent of Public Safety James L. McGee.

Twenty-two of the lads had had 100 percent attendance during the school term of 1931-32, and exercised watchfulness for their co-students each school day. To these were presented gilded medals suspended from ribbons of green and white, the colors of the National Safety Council. Nine boys were awarded small bronze medals, this group having missed but one day or less during the term designated. The medals, regulated by the National Safety Council, were presented by Superintendent McGee on behalf of the Department of Public Safety.

Winners of these awards are: For 100 percent attendance—Bath street school, William Moss, George McLean, Eli Tetterer, Herbert Slack; high school building, Louis Salvati, Roy Bailey, Joseph Dooley, Samuel Hubbard; Wood street school, Louis Pezzullo, Joseph Conti, George Burger, Fred Bartle, Louis Tomlinson; Washington street school, Rosario Bono; St. Ann's School, Enidiot Clotti, Peter Caro, Michael Seone, Angelo Spinelli, Stephen Brassia; St. Mark's School, Philip Callahan, Wilmer Jones, Charles Oliver.

Absent one day or less: Bath street school, Francis Grimes; Jefferson avenue building, Anthony Tisone, Christopher Adams, Alfred Capriotti, Melvin Fry, Amolingo Sabatino; Washington street school, Joseph Ferraro; Wood street, Harry West; high school building, Robert Petrick.

Singing of Southern melodies, led by W. Seidler, music instructor of Bristol public schools, opened the meeting, which was attended by several hundred pupils of the public and parochial schools. Superintendent McGee congratulated the members of the patrol upon the manner in which they executed their duties, and the schools in general for the way in which the patrol was conducted. Howard E. James, superintendent of public schools, was called to the platform. Mr. James called attention to one of the reasons for the meeting: "To honor the boys who have been faithful to their duty." He added, "They attended school regularly, and did their work without grumbling. They helped the teachers and they helped you. We want you to respect and help these safety patrol lads because they help you."

Another speaker was Stanford K. Runyan, president of the Fathers' Association, Bristol public schools, which organization is in part responsible for the equipping of the patrol. The group assisting the boys and girls to cross streets safely now numbers about 120.

"This is the group which helps you who are blind to the dangers on the streets of Bristol," stated E. P. Curran, safety director of Keystone Automobile Club, Philadelphia, when he talked to the students. Mr. Curran asked all to co-operate for safety's sake, adding, "In June let us be able to say 'We have helped. We have been careful in crossing streets.'" Referring to the motion picture reels which were to follow, Mr. Curran asked his listeners to "Think of the Safety Patrol and resolve that you are not going to be injured. Keep this in mind as you watch these pictures."

Captain Hanley, head of the juvenile department of Philadelphia police, congratulated the young folks on their co-operation in the work for safety in the borough. "I'm doing work for safety along another line. We have older boys in our cities whom we must warn about the pitfalls that await them when they remain idle and lounge on the street corners." Capt. Hanley told that the police want the boys and girls to know they are their friends. "We, in Philadelphia, hope the day will come when we will be able to say to the boys on the corners, 'Go over to that recreation centre,' or 'Go over to that club house,' instead of just telling them to move on. We must have some place to send them where they will be able to play and to enjoy fellowship under the right influence with other boys."

The high school orchestra assisted with the music. Through courtesy of Edward Lynn, manager of the Grand Theatre, a comic reel followed the three pictures shown by the Keystone Club representatives. The latter three were: "Why be a goose?", "Goofs," and "Why be careless?" Use of the theatre for the afternoon program was also made possible by the management of the Grand.

PASSING OF SCANDAL SHEETS

The idea that the lower a newspaper could descend in the social scale the greater would be its popularity and profit seemed pretty well established in the days when money was easy and living loose, but it seems to have been knocked into a cocked hat by a couple of years of sobering hard times.

Since money became tight and living tighter several newspapers of the type called tabloid and of the above mentioned policy have gone out of business. Among them was a New York scandal sheet which because of eight years of continuous publication might have been supposed well established.

They failed because the phase of life they were created to interpret has ceased to be a major phase and become one of minor importance. Creatures of the jazz age, they died with the jazz age.

Not all tabloids have been scandal sheets, but all tabloids have suffered from the unsavory reputation of those which made the name "tabloid" synonymous with yellow journalism. There is much to be said in favor of the newspaper of smaller size, especially in those centers of population where half the population spends part of each day in crowded cars.

Tabloids shut up shop only when advertisers no longer use them, and when business changes advertising mediums it is because the old medium no longer sells goods. What better proof could be asked that the public has turned thumbs down upon those newspapers which exploit sensation, viciousness and depravity?

THE FEE TEST

There is no injustice or extortion in the new policy of the Federal Department of Commerce placing certain of its services on a sales basis. If the department is open to criticism it is for not having assessed private business for these services from their inception.

Henceforth concerns wanting them must pay for the trade lists, sales reports, periodical releases of commodity, technical and regional divisions of the bureau, monthly statistical releases and individual statements. In the past they were distributed free.

While the public benefits indirectly from all foreign trade captured by American business there is no reason why the taxpayers should pay for a special service rendered private business by the government. The greater profit to be derived accrues to the businesses utilizing the service, and though business is in distress it is still better able to pay than the people.

Government bureaus rendering such special services should be supported by their fees or cease functioning. If the service isn't worth what it costs, then the loss to business from its abandonment would be slight. Wouldn't the fee test prove useful in determining which departments and bureaus in the national and state capitals are excess baggage?

It takes a beauty doctor to make a mountain out of a mole spot.

What puzzles us is why they fill the battery water and then keep it in the dirtiest bottle.

"Can't We Settle This Without Violence?"

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

AT seventeen Daphne Haines finds herself the victim of a hard, calculating stepmother who had married her father for money. Crystal, the second Mrs. Haines' beautiful daughter, becomes the darling of the household, usurping Daphne's place in her father's affections. The two women tolerate Daphne until Ralph McKevitt, a wealthy young man who had been calling upon Crystal, discovers Daphne in the garden one lovely Spring day, and admires her. Crystal indignantly resents this, resorts to tears and temperament, but is finally placated when her mother promises to "fix everything." Realizing that Daphne developing into beautiful womanhood may prove a thorn in the path of Crystal's conquest of McKevitt, Mrs. Haines determines to make the girl's life miserable. Cleverly she provokes a quarrel between Daphne and her father. Slyly, cunningly, Mrs. Haines gold-digs her aged husband to buy finery for Crystal, while Daphne is neglected. The pressure on family purse strings becomes so great that Mr. Haines calls a halt. Then his wife bitterly denounces him. Daphne learns that her stepmother must wield mystic power over her father, for no matter how the coarse woman insults him, he invariably comes crawling back to her seeking forgiveness. Daphne feels that she no longer has a place in her father's heart, so after a weary night she decides to leave home.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER V.

MRS. HAINES' hands, moist and cold, like butcher's meat, heavy on Daphne's shoulders.

It was a long time before Daphne could forget that, the shame and disgust of it, the sick thinking from those violent hands. But most of what followed was like part of an ugly dream. Crystal, white and disheveled screaming, "Mr. Haines! Mrs. Haines—come quick!"

Her stepmother's face with the little piggy eyes, and the loose red mouth, so close to hers . . . had she really pushed it away? She couldn't quite remember afterward, and she didn't want to remember. There was enough that she couldn't forget.

She heard herself saying over and over, "I don't care, she hadn't any right to take it, and now she's lost it—Mother's paisley shawl!"

And Mrs. Haines turning on the old man who had come bustling and anxious, to settle it. "What if she did lose the old rag—what of it? Rubbish anyway. You sent her new evening wrap back to the store, the child had to wear something. Oh what a fool I was to marry you—what a fool . . . a good looking woman, still young . . . popular with the opposite sex ever since I was fourteen years old . . . with all my chances, and now I'm tied to you . . . A pauper . . . in your second childhood, yes you are, you old fool, you! With an ill-natured child, making trouble . . . oh what a life of misery I let myself in for, just because I had a soft heart and t-took you—"

"But Adelina—Adelina, you don't mean that—"

Daphne slipped away. He rocked himself back and forth, back and forth, in the little chintz-covered chair.

Daphne's eyes, so terribly hurt . . . reproachful too, as if she had anything to reproach him for, a good father! Serve her right. Let her take on if she wanted to, it was all her fault, coming between him and Adelina . . . the first chance he had ever been happy . . . He had never been happy with Martha . . .

Soft spoken she was, and gentle. She seemed so . . . so everything that he wanted. Yes, he had counted on great things from Martha, a woman in the house to make him comfortable. It had been lonely after his mother died . . . There was a woman . . . his mother . . . no nonsense about her. Eleven children she had, and never missed more than a week's work with any of them. Monday week she had the wash out as usual.

Not Martha . . . weak . . . and silly. Ran up the stairs, not half looking where she was going, the day he brought her home. Turned back to say some foolish thing about the pretty wood in the baluster. "Such a dear, darling house, Abner—I—just love it already! Look, I'm kissing the sweet wood in the railing!" No wonder she caught her heel and fell, carrying on foolish like that . . . Terrible shock for a man, seeing his bride fall like that, having to pick her up, a crumpled little heap at the foot of the stairs . . . He sighed, remembering . . . Four months she was in bed, and a pretty penny it cost him. And after that she was never good for much.

"He doesn't want me—it's no use."

He could see her yet, white faced and silent, dragging through the work, with those big eyes looking at him . . . Moody and tearful. Full of nonsensical ideas. Even the child was a disappointment, not a boy after all. Insisting on naming it Daphne . . . Daphne's a pretty name. I mean her to have something pretty!"

Saying that over and over through blue lips, and so weak and ill that he dared not cross her, and hold out for Henrietta . . . A great disappointment, Martha was, and Daphne too. Touchy, like her mother . . . Always talking about prettiness, sunsets, poetry!

And when a little sunshine did come into his life, when he did find a lively, sensible woman to appreciate him and he was beginning to live for the first time in his life, then Daphne spoils it . . . ruins everything . . .

"Adelina!" he cried, jumping up in a panic. "Adelina!"

He beat frenzied hands against her locked door, but she did not answer, presently he went away.

They waited dinner till half past six, but he did not come back. "I hope you're satisfied now that you've driven my husband out of the house!" Adelina said bitterly.

Daphne did not answer but she saw that her stepmother had decided to "make-up" for she was wearing her best lavender voile with the lace collar, and above the powdery pink marshmallow of her face her yellow hair was carefully crimped.

Old man Haines saw it too when he tiptoed in about half past eight, humming a little tune to show he wasn't nervous.

"I got a pork chop in the oven for you," his wife said, without looking up. "I hope it ain't all dried up—"

He reached out his arms to her, and if she stiffened a little she did not draw away. She had had time to think. To think of the dress-making days, of her needle-pricked fingers, the little furnished room she had in San Jose, with the folding bed and the sewing machine and the everlasting scraps on the floor. After all, she had a comfortable home now . . .

"Bless you, Adelina, bless you!" The old man's heart went out to her in a great wave of gratitude.
